Army officer, of Caldwell Co., N. O. Correspondence, diary, legal documents, account books, mercantile records, surveying records, and other papers (chiefly 1838-80) of Lenoir, of his father, William Lenoir, and of his children. The early papers concern horse breeding, legal matters, delism in North Carolina (1790's), and the international situation (1780's). Thomas Lenoir's papers constitute the majority of the collection and relate to the settlement of his father's estate, activities of his brother in Tennessee and his sons at the University of North Carolina, and ante bellum agriculture in North Carolina. Postwar letters pertain mainly to politics, agriculture, cattle diseases, family matters, student life at the University of North Carolina and at Davis Military School, Winston-Salem (now Winston-Salem), N. C., North Carolina militia, and Civil War reminiscences. Correspondents include W. J. Bingham, Calvin J. Cowles, Charles F. Deems, S. F. Patterson, and Lewis Williams.

Minister and political leader. Correspondence, minutes of meetings, financial statements, membership lists, transcripts of speeches, articles, press releases, and newspaper clippings, documenting Williams' activities in the following organizations: the League for Independent Political Action, the Farmer Labor Political Federation, the American Commonwealth Political Federation, the Farmer Labor Party of Minnesota, the Union for Democratic Action, the Independent Voters of Illinois, and the American League for a Free Palestine. The papers contain much information on the many political protest groups of the 1930's and shed light on various peripheral issues such as religion, organized labor, education, minority problems, race relations, world peace, disarmament, pacifism, and prohibition. The bulk of the papers relate to national issues, but there is considerable data on Minnesota politics, particularly on Williams' campaign for the 4th Congressional district seat in 1936. Includes a small group of family correspondence. Correspondents include Harry Elmer Barnes, Louis F. Budenz, John Dewey, Paul Douglas, Felix Frankfurter, Lynn L. Frazier, William Green, the La Follettes, Ernest Lundeen, Gerald P. Nye, Henrik Shipstead, Norman M. Thomas, Rexford G. Tugwell, and Oswald Garrison Villard. The material is related to the society's Farmer-Labor Party and Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party collections.

Dibble, Samuel, 1837-1913.

Papers, 1779-1910.
1672 items.
In Duke University Library.
Lawyer, politician, and U. S. Representative from South Carolina. Correspondence, business and legal papers, and printed matter, mostly 1855-1900, and reflecting an interest in South Carolina affairs. All pre-1850 papers are legal documents; a few letters written while Dibble was a Confederate soldier relate to the home front; post-bellum correspondence deals with such matters as phosphate mining, a lawyer's professional activities, the Negro in post-Reconstruction politics, and Dibble's opposition to Governor Tillman. Later papers display his expanding activities in banking and railroading. After 1800 the papers concern A. C. Dibble, a brother, and L. V. and Samuel Dibble, both sons. Also included are land titles and transfers and surveyors' notebooks.

Pemberton family.

Papers, 1800-1900.

In Historical Society of Pennsylvania collections. Papers of John Pemberton, Philadelphia merchant, 1783-1847, his wife Rebecca Clifford Pemberton, and their descendants. Papers of John Pemberton include several letters from Andrew Jackson. Papers of Israel Pemberton, 1818-1885, who surveyed routes for several early railroads in Pennsylvania, Delaware, Tennessee, and Ohio and also worked in the coastal surveys of Florida and Louisiana, reveal the difficulties under which the early engineers worked. His later letters (1870-85) show his interest in art and particularly in the Spanish artist Mariano Fortuny y Carbo. Letters (1830-81) of John C. Pemberton, Israel's brother, to his family give details of an army officer's life. Correspondence of another brother, Henry, a chemist and inventor, relates to salt manufacturing. Other members of the family are represented by less important papers.

Papers of Samuel Wells Williams, Frederick Wells Williams, and Wayland Wells Williams. Correspondence (comprising over half of the collection), MS. of S. W. Williams's Syllabic dictionary of the Chinese language, themes and lecture notes by F. W. Williams, diaries, newspaper clippings, articles on China, maps, and pictures. Bulk of the correspondence relates to S. W. Williams, missionary, diplomat, and Sinologue. The period between 1845 and 1855 has extensive correspondence with missionaries and with James Dwight Dana and Matthew C. Perry, whom Williams accompanied on his mission to open Japan and on his return visit in 1854. Williams's letters to friends and family comment on progress made and their reception in Japan. In 1856 Williams became secretary and interpreter to the American Legation in China and many of the letters refer to Chinese problems of the following 20 years. His correspondents include, in addition to Dana and Perry, Anson Burlingame, Hamilton Fish, Asa Gray, Frederick Low, William Bradford Reed, and William Henry Seward. The remaining correspondence cover the period 1885 to 1939, encompassing the correspondence of Frederick Wells Williams, Yale professor, and Wayland Wells Williams, writer.

NAME INDEX

This index lists alphabetically the names of persons, families, and corporate entities (i. e., associations, institutions, business firms, governmental agencies, etc.) connected with the collections cataloged in this volume. The nature of their involvement varies from case to case. Some are authors, some are subjects, some are addressees, and others are involved more tangentially. Inspection of the entry for the appropriate collection will generally clarify the relationship.

Each name is followed by the number of any entry in which it appears. When the name serves as a main entry, the number is underscored. In the main list each entry appears sequentially according to the number given in its lower right corner. Entries beginning with the same name are arranged in the following order: persons, families, places, institutions, and titles. Personal and corporate names appear also in the subject index in circumstances noted in the introduction to that index.

In preparing this index, the editors have tried to combine under one form of name all references to the same person and to distinguish between different persons with the same or similar names. Limitations of information and time have necessarily prevented perfect achievement of these objectives. An asterisk has been used before a name when the editors were uncertain that the citations pertain to only one person or when they knew the references pertain to two or more persons who could not be satisfactorily distinguished. It is expected that the users of this index will often have the special knowledge necessary to resolve such uncertainties.
